Transcranial Direct Current Stimulation

Features of the neurotechnology

- Transcranial Direct Current Stimulation (tDCS) involves external electrodes, that deliver small electrical currents to stimulate the brain.
- It doesn't involve any surgery, making it less expensive than implantable devices.
- o The electrodes are attached to the scalp.
- o It is removable.
- It is portable, wearable, and allows for patients to have control over the device settings.